

ConnectiD unveils world's smartest address book app at TNW 2015 in NYC

Innovative, patented technology set to revolutionise the way people keep in touch

The Next Web, 18th November 2015, NYC: ConnectiD today reveals an easy-to-use app for people to access, share and automatically update their contact information. The technology enables users to instantly exchange a full set of details, including social handles, with current or new contacts via the app, email, sms, Airdrop or NFC.

ConnectiD seamlessly connects users to everyone they know on the service when they join, with updates received in real-time. In addition, ConnectiD will be one of the first services to solve the issue of exchanging contact details without both users requiring the app.

With a vision to organise the world's contact information, the ConnectiD team have placed great emphasis on trust and users control of their own information, and have developed the app to deliberately avoid spamming contacts in your addressbook. The user has complete control over how they share their details and with whom, via two different profiles available at launch

With plans to deliver on the promise of a meta-network, ConnectiD wants to help users be better informed about their contacts before they reach out, so has included Timezone Awareness and a Smart Predictive Dialer to reach contacts more quickly and easily. It also has a range of other features lined-up to deliver on the promise of the world's smartest address book.

The founder who is a successful Yacht Broker based in London, created ConnectiD after becoming frustrated by how much time it takes to exchange contact details when meeting new contacts. Having downloaded a number of apps to help him tackle this, he ended up with a contact list full of duplicates and incorrectly merged people, and decided there must be a better way.

Pricing and availability

ConnectiD will be free and launched initially on iOS (iOS 7.1 or above) shortly followed by Google Play.

“In 2015 methods of communication have increased to an unprecedented level. With the launch of ConnectiD, we have the opportunity to make contact details truly digital and create one of the first meta-networks. There is a significant market opportunity for the universal issue of up-to-date contact details and we believe we have created something innovative and unique, that will change the way people exchange details now and in the future.”
