Penta starts in Italy together with solarisBank

Berlin, 25.10.2019 - Penta, the digital platform for business banking, starts its international expansion together with solarisBank, the technology company with a banking license. Italy is the first country outside Germany where Penta offers its business banking product, starting with immediate effect.

Since the launch of Penta in Germany during December 2017, the company has recorded strong growth, having established itself as a digital banking partner for more than 11,000 companies. For its offering of digital business accounts and debit cards with individual limits for employees - so-called Team Cards - Penta relies on the banking infrastructure of the Banking-as-a-Service platform solarisBank, which as a fully licensed bank acts as the account-holding institution. For solarisBank, the expansion marks the first step into other European countries with a digital banking partner company.

"We are delighted to take this next step with one of our first partners, Penta. This joint European expansion is a big and important undertaking for us. Penta and solarisBank are united by the ambition to build not just a national but an international digital champion."

— Jörg Diewald, Chief Commercial Officer of solarisBank

"Small and medium-sized enterprises in Europe often have very similar banking problems. At Penta, we're always talking with and listening to our customers so that we are the best service cooperation partner in each of our respective countries. Penta's a financial platform that was built to give companies the exact services they need. Italy is the first step in rolling out our successful model internationally from Germany," says Marko Wenthin, CEO of Penta.

In addition to a digital business account with features including SEPA transfers, a real-time financial overview and the Team Cards mentioned above, Penta also offers its business account customers digital bookkeeping and expense management. In Italy, Penta also collaborates with Credimi, enabling its Italian customers to easily and digitally apply for fast credit through Penta.
