Djokovic odds went from 11:6 to 4:9 to become Australian Open 2023 winner

Novak Djokovic has been favored to win the 2023 Australian Open from before his first serve. His odds continue to shorten. He is a heavy favorite heading into the final against Stefano Tsitsipas.

That is what happens when the winner of the 2019, '20 and '21 champ returns after a COVID-19-protocol enforced exile last year.

According to online sportsbook BetUS, the Serbian started the first round with odds of 11:16, with those odds at 4:9 ahead of Sunday's final.

Tsitsipas was also among the Open favorites. Despite his odds being less encouraging than his opponent, they went from a starting 11:1 to a final 7:2 when the Australian Open Men's Outright line closed.

Djokovic's victories plus the early exits from the No. 1 seed (Rafael Nadal), No. 2 seed (Casper Ruud), and six of the other Top 10 seeds turned him into attracting 77.66% of the money line in his favor and 85.81% of the dollar volume wagered.

In addition, and despite battling a hamstring injury, Djokovic comes into the final in vintage form, having dropped just one set this tournament and having crushed Tommy Paul 7-5, 6-1, 6-2 in the semifinals.

Tsitsipas is in his second Grand Slam final after becoming the French Open runner-up last year, where Djokovic got his 20th Slam title. The third seed has been a man on a mission, troubled only by Jannik Sinner in the fourth round and Karen Khachanov extending him to four sets in a semifinal.

Tsitsipas would become world No 1 if he wins the title on Sunday.

The Australian Open male final is a day away, and BetUS oddsmakers have Novak Djokovic at -5½ games on the spread. The Serbian has captured more than 83% of the wagers placed but only 37% of the total dollars bet on the match, the company reports.

Despite being the underdog and currently sitting at 4:1 the Greek and world No. 4 Tsitsipas has attracted 62.50% of the tickets and almost 96% of the money volume bets placed.
