

Sabrina Santiago is a photo-based artist living and working in New York. She explores the poetry of everyday life by capturing people in public and private space. Santiago uses photography as a way to bring the human community into conversation with itself and as a form of self-reflection. She currently takes on assignments for The New York Times and New York Magazine amongst others.